"TO REBEL...NOT TO PARTY"

There is an increasing number of participants within Occupy LA who bring a festive approach with their support for the Occupy Wall Street movement. However their fun activities have created discussion amongst occupiers. One stated she believed we are here "to rebel. Not to party."

To rebel or not to party that is the question.

This occupation is a celebration, a party of sorts. And it also is a peaceful civil rebellion orchestrated by a diverse group of people from diverse sets of backgrounds who are now realizing the power the 99% have against the 1% who bear virtually all the responsibility for the injustice and economic inequality which falls upon our families. It is a peaceful civil rebellion in the vein of King and Gandhi. How can the two co-exist?

Planning? Within one gathering yesterday there was a discussion about planning for the growth of the camp and "placement of tents" within. It was said there needs to be ways to ease the movement around tents and to "centrally" share essential amenities, etc. A request of drummers to stop at specific times at night was presented for thought as well.

This is Not Burning Man" a sign up over the weekend stated. No this is not Burning which is a desert occurrence that began 25 years ago and based in part on the elimination of ideological puritism.

Occupy LA has similarities but it is not Burning Man.

Occupy LA is a unique gathering in conjunction with Occupy Wall Street. Both are seeking truth wherever it leads us because the truth will set us free.

Editors Note: Sue Basko, a California lawyer, has provided Occupy LA with legal expertise and she said recently on OccupyLosAngeles.org that she has “been (and always will be) on doing things legally and peacefully.” She went on, “FIRST, it is absolutely always illegal in the state of California to engage in any sort of a protest on a freeway overpass or near a freeway or near an on or off ramp or near a bridge. Why is this so? And why is it moreso in Los Angeles? Because a permit is required for any protest that may affect traffic. And a permit will never be given to be near a freeway or highway.” Protesters should be careful if you are sharing your message with our freeway friends.
